GRISWOLD'S PAST

Two rivers flow through Griswold, the Pachaug River (an Indian name meaning "turning point" and the Quinebaug River (meaning "long pond"). Nestled between beautiful hills and small mountains, most of the town's intensive development has occurred on the level land along the Pachaug River and at the confluence of the Pachaug and Quinebaug Rivers in Jewett City, the central business district of the Town of Griswold. These streams were capable of producing waterpower that has attracted agriculture, trade and industry.

Originally a part of the Pequot, the Mohegan came from the upper Hudson River Valley in New York near Lake Champlain. Sometime around 1500, both tribes left this area and moved to the Thames River Valley in southeastern Connecticut. The Mohegan called their homeland Moheganek and occupied portions of the Thames Valley, of what was called Pachaug the area that is now Griswold.

The title to the lands of Griswold were held by 2 rival claimants, the Colony of Connecticut and the Mohegan Indians, the original owners of the soil. Although the Colony in 1640 obtained a conveyance from Uncas of all the lands in Connecticut belonging to his tribe, except their planting grounds, the title continued in dispute so that usually whenever a farm was granted in the Mohegan country by the General Court it was considered safe and wise to also obtain a grant from the Mohegan Chief.

Matt's Mission exists to end the stigma and shame of drug addiction

Our organization's goals are to:

1. Provide awareness of addiction as a disease focusing on treatment not punishment
2. Provide pathways into treatment and services for individuals suffering from addiction without shame, blame or arrest.
