BillionGraves & FGS to Honor "War of 1812" Participants

The Federation of Genealogical Societies and cemetery website BillionGraves recently announced a joint project to image all of the gravestone markers for participants of the War of 1812. "The images from these markers, coupled with the Federation's current project to raise the funds to digitize the 7.2 million images of the pensions for those who participated in the War of 1812 are a natural fit," said D. Joshua Taylor, President of FGS.

Hudson Gunn, President of BillionGraves said, "This July our focus is to see that the nation's military headstones are documented and preserved for future generations. Headstones from early American history are guickly deteriorating, making it only a matter of time before they are lost forever. We are very pleased to have the Federation lend its help to spread this message for the War of 1812 veterans." July is a great month to remember the participants of the "Second Revolution" as well as the American Revolution.

It is estimated that as many as 350,000 men may have served in the war. Although it is impossible to know how many may have cemetery markers, there could be as many as 50,000-80,000 markers for these veterans.

BillionGraves and The Federation of Genealogical Societies are asking anyone with knowledge of a cemetery marker for a War of 1812 veteran to upload the image of the marker to the BillionGraves website (www.billiongraves.com) using their free mobile application during the month of July to honor and remember the service of those who served in the "Second Revolution."

If you upload an image for a War of 1812 veteran during the month of July or anytime thereafter, please let them know on Facebook or Twitter by using the hashtag #1812today and/or #warof1812 and/or #billiongraves.

The efforts from these two organizations will provide a very valuable asset for researchers and historians researching 1812 veterans. With the Federation raising awareness of the project

FamilySearch Publishes Its Billionth Image

FamilySearch recently announced that they have published over a billion images. "Although a few social sites like Flickr and Facebook can boast over a billion photos contributed by users, there is no site like FamilySearch.org that has published more than one billion images of historic records," said Rod DeGiulio in a press release. DeGiulio is the director of FamilySearch's Record Division. This is quite the accomplishment considering the head start by Ancestry.com or the size of the record colto digitize the War of 1812 pension records during the month of July and BillionGraves making the cemetery markers of War of 1812 veterans immediately searchable, it should be an exciting month for all genealogists and historians.

The Federation of Genealogical Societies also launched a major fundraising campaign for the Preserve the Pensions Project to honor the memory of these veterans in July. The effort will include national War of 1812 cemeteries, and include persons with individual markers in local and private cemeteries. The Federation seeks to raise an average of $1,812 each day of July, and will be posting the progress toward the fundraising goal on Facebook and Twitter. Those interested in preserving this valuable piece of America's documented history can make a single contribution or become a monthly contributor of the Preserve the Pensions project. lections of the national archives of various nations. The billionth image was published in a Peru vital records collection. Family Search started preserving and providing access to the world's historical records for genealogy purposes in 1938, and it took 58 years to publish the first two billion images of historic records on microfilm. In the past 7 years, it has been able to publish one billion images at Family Search.org, which provides access to anyone, anywhere through the Internet. DeGiulio projects the next billion images should take about 3-5 years to publish.

NARA's new location in Broomfield can be found on Google Maps but not necessarily on other mapping services. Take Exit 229 (Lafayette-Brighton), then west on Highway 7, get in the right-turn-only lane and make the first right turn (about 1/8th of a mile west). There is no sign on Highway 7 for NARA's Huron Street facility but look for the large blue/white building to the northwest. If you go past the Children's Hospital (on the right), you've gone too far.

New England Naturalization Records from 1791–1906 Released on Findmypast

Lands & locations in New England were all popular destinations for immigration and settlement since colonial times due to the rich and expansive farmlands and large towns and cities such as Boston, Providence and Hartford. Findmypast has just released 635,867 records filed at various courts throughout the six states of New England, which include Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Vermont. After the founding of the United States, new immigrants to the area who wished to become citizens needed to apply for naturalization before attaining citizenship. While the information for each person may vary, New England naturalizations 1791-1906 usually provides Names, Address, Certificate number, Title and location of court, Country of birth, Birth date, Date of arrival in U.S., Place of arrival in U.S., Date of naturalization, & Names and addresses of witnesses. You can learn more and also search the records at Findmypast at (subscription is required) http://goo.gl/YPTjsp.

Findmypast Acquires Mocavo

In June 2014, Mocavo announced that it has been acquired by Findmypast/DC Thomson Family History. For the past few years, the Mocavo team has dedicated itself to bringing innovation and competition to the genealogy industry. In October, 2013, they launched their Free Forever revolution and began putting more than 1,000 free databases online every day. With the merger, they will bring together two companies with enormous resources, that have plans to merge an enormous amount of technology with vast amounts of content.

"CHECK THIS OUT" Family history-related fiction & nonfiction book reviews by CGHS members

The Ticket by Karen Schutte (2010—call# Fiction Schut, K Tic)

When Karl Kessel decided to immigrate to America, he had one thing on his mind—opportunity! After a grueling and lifechanging journey aboard a cramped ship across the Atlantic, Karl prepared a way for his wife and two children to join him in the new country, and soon they were on their way to success. However, as with most immigrant families in the early part of the twentieth century in America, hardships and struggles became the daily toil. The struggle between retaining German traditional values and discovering new ways of living in rural Wyoming began to take its toll on the growing family. Karen Schutte spins a compelling family story woven with rich historical detail, based on the true story of her own great grandparents' stark life in the Bighorn Basin. Her unvarnished narrative exposes Karl's harsh nature alongside his determination to succeed at any cost. We see America change throughout the span of their life together, as she portrays real family history through the gripping and emotional story of the Kessel family. Schutte's books are about immigration to Wyoming and not only relate to many Wyoming people but to people all across this country who have similar stories. The Ticket was selected as the Best Historical Fiction Novel for 2013 by the Wyoming State Historical Society and her second book, Seed of the Volga, recently received the same award for 2014.

Seed of the Volga by Karen Schutte (2013-Fiction)

This is Schutte's second novel which begins in mid 1700 in current day Germany. Princess Theraisa Von Steiner discovers she is with child soon after the tragic death of her beloved David Ritter. Unwed and pregnant, she is desperate to escape the wrath of her father and the wagging tongues of the upper class. Her aunt steals her away to the German settlements on the Volga River where she finds seclusion and peace for a while. Her son David and his family live in peace and prosperity until they feel the hot breath of the Bolsheviks. They make the unthinkable decision to leave the German settlements for safety and freedom in America. They soon find the streets are not paved with gold but with disappointment and struggle. They came with a sugar beet hoe in one hand and the Bible in the other! The author puts readers into her emotional stories that are hard to put down. —LCLS Catalog & WLD
