Eaton Modernizes Training Facility

Eaton Corporation, a diversified power management company, is a global technology leader in electrical components and systems for power quality, distribution and control; hydraulics components, systems and services for industrial and mobile equipment; aerospace fuel, hydraulics and pneumatic systems for commercial and military use; and truck and automotive drivetrain and powertrain systems for performance, fuel economy and safety.

In mid 2010, the Power Quality Division headquartered in Raleigh, N.C., planned to renovate its training center, built in the late '70s and now very dated. The plans called for a more modern, up-to-date Fortune 500 look and feel.

Eaton chose Spectra Builders as its partner to perform the renovation. The project kicked off last September and was completed in early November, with the main focus on the office, break room and classrooms. It was critical that the training center remain operational during construction to continue training of Eaton employees. Spectra and the Eaton management team worked together closely to do the work in phases so the classes could continue. Our crews worked diligently to minimize any interruption to normal operations.

Architectural design was provided by HagerSmith Design PA, and Linda Miller of Indoff Solutions Unlimited handled all the interior design and new furniture for the renovation.

Employees working in the building on a daily basis, as well as the students that visit the facility, are delighted with the refurbished facility and are enjoying spending time there.
