To Whom It May Concern:

International Turbo Systems, Inc. (ITSI) is currently a subcontractor to CACI supporting the Department of Justice's (DOJ's) Automated Debt Collection Management (ADCM) project, and has been involved with this effort since 1996. The ADCM contract supports Federal litigation to collect debts owed to the United States, ranging from delinquent student loans to Superfund recoveries. Kathleen Holley and her company have supported software for a network that connects the DOJ's U.S. Attorney's offices, the offices of their associated private counsels, and the DOJ's DC area offices. The system is comprised of a COTS solution, combined with CACI-developed modules, which Ms. Holley played an integral part of developing and continues to provide exemplary support to maintain.

In addition to system development, the project includes support for case processing, financial operations, help desk, training, configuration management, testing, requirements management, security, documentation, and facility management functional areas. Not only has Ms. Holley proven to be an invaluable resource with regard to system development, ITSI has expanded its support to include providing other highly skilled staff to support software development, testing, financial operations, and change management.

ITSI has been and continues to be a preferred vendor for CACI and comes highly recommended.

Sincerely,
