

Where are MY reparations?

March 28, 2012

I don't get the race identity thing. I'm a WASP who'd rather have a burger and beer with regular Americans like ex-border agent Ignacio Ramos or Justice Clarence Thomas than Filet Mignon and Dom Perignon with creepy WASPS like Anderson Cooper or Richard Dawkins. But, I finally got so sick of lefty Indians and Hispanics running around squealing "European go home, you stole our land," that I decided to look into it.

Let's move backward in time and send the lefty racists running to their medicine cabinets, okay?

First, America got the southwest United States after The Mexican-American War was started by a Mexican attack on American troops in 1846. Essentially Mexico's government was a collection of criminal factions that continually threatened the United States, refused to pay reparations for crimes against Americans and conducted endless gang shoot-outs with each other some historians generously call civil wars. Finally, we just occupied the place and got the southwest United States in the peace treaty.

So, if we "stole" it from Mexico, where'd Mexico get it?

By stealing it. The Southwest United States belonged to Spain from 1540 until the Mestizos and Indians (Mexicans) started a war with Spain. The war lasted from 1810 until 1821 and at the end of it the "Mexicans" took the southwest U.S. from Spain.

So, if Mexico stole it from Spain, where'd Spain get it?

By stealing it. Spain took it from the Aztecs, or "Native Americans" after beating them in a war ending in Mexico City in 1521. After that, Spain moved north, kept winning battles and eventually claimed the southwest U.S.

So, if Spain stole it from "Native Americans," where'd they get it?

By stealing it. Turns out that "Native American" jazz is a guilt trip used to prevent litter, market ugly jewelry and keep casinos in business. The Indians stole America and guess who from?

We actually know the answer to that question, thanks to the bones of Kennewick Man, a 9,300-year-old skeleton found in 1996 along the Columbia River at Kennewick, Washington.

"Archaeology" in Volume 55, Number 6, November/December 2002 asked one of the experts allowed to scrutinize the bones, Archaeologist James Chatters:

"What's your view on the big questions: where did the first North Americans come from and when?"

Here's where it gets really good. You're going to love this.

“(T)he currently available evidence . . . indicates the first Americans derive culturally from . . . Central Europe,” said Chatters.

That's not all. Eventually another of the experts, Dr. Hugh Berryman and ScienceDaily (Apr. 25, 2006) were more specific. “Berryman says Kennewick's facial features are most similar to those of . . . the Ainu, . . . Ainu's facial features appear European. Their eyes may lack the Asian almond-shaped appearance, and their hair may be light and curly in color.”

According to Chatters in “Archaeology” a spear point was found in our White European (Caucasian) friend Kennewick Man and: “The spear point in his pelvis also may be offering a clue about one of the later waves (of migration) . . . it appears to be a classic Cascade point, a representative of . . . late Prehistoric northwestern American Indians (weapons). The facts that his death comes at the beginning of the Cascade Phase of Northwest prehistory and that the spear point is associated with people who differ profoundly from him in their physical characteristics hints that the transition was not always a peaceful one.”

Looks like us real Native Americans, Europeans with round eyes and curly blonde hair, had our land stolen and were murdered by the invading American Indians' and Hispanics' forefathers.

Racist genocide!

Siberian invaders go home! But first, how about reparations, like maybe the keys to a Casino or Taco Bell or something?

Alternatively, I'll compromise. Why not shut up and we'll all be fellow Americans? Deal?

This is a column of opinion and satire. The author knows of no undisclosed facts. contact Lewis at josephmaxlewis.com © Joseph M. Lewis